Forms in the Abyss

A Philosophical Bridge between Sartre and Derrida

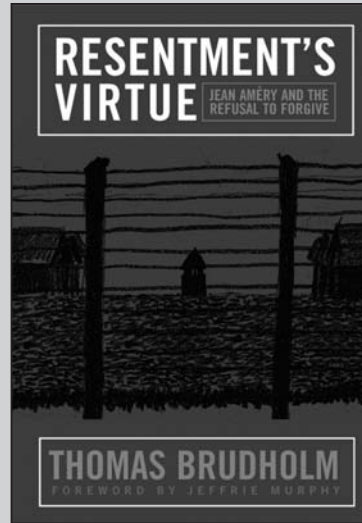

Steve Martinot

The relationship between the existentialist Jean-Paul Sartre and the post-structuralist Jacques Derrida has never been fully examined until now. In Forms in the Abyss, Steve Martinot finds, between these two important philosophical thinkers of the twentieth century, “a common uncommonality” by which he sees them confront each other as “kindred souls” despite their vast differences.

“The project of transcoding Sartrean language into the Derridean coordinates, and vice-versa, is an unseasonable one whose reward lies in the defamiliarization of both. Martinot’s minute, technical readings avoid all facile ideological generalizations and send us back to the original texts with new eyes.” — Fredric Jameson

Resentment's Virtue

Jean Améry and the Refusal to Forgive

Thomas Brudholm

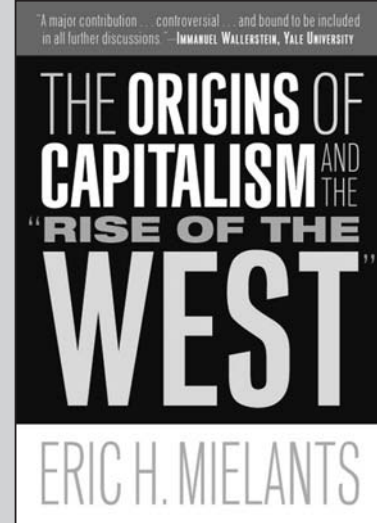

With a Foreword by Jeffrie Murphy

Building on the writings of Holocaust survivor Jean Améry and the work of the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission, Thomas Brudholm argues that the preservation of resentment can be the reflex of a moral protest that might be as permissible, humane or honorable as the willingness to forgive.

“Brudholm illustrates nicely that ‘negative emotions’ are not only understandable in the aftermath of mass atrocity, but that they possess a moral component that is often ignored by the boosters of reconciliation.” — Andrew Woolford

The Origins of Capitalism and the “Rise of the West”

Eric H. Mielants

Eric Mielants provides a fresh, interdisciplinary interpretation of the origins of modernity in general and of capitalism in particular.

“A major contribution to the worldwide debate on the origins of the modern world. It is controversial, encompassing in its survey of the data and the literature, and bound to be included in all further discussions.”

Labor of Fire

Bruno Gulli

In Labor of Fire, Bruno Gulli offers a timely and much needed re-examination of the concept of labor. Distinguishing between “productive labor” (working for money or subsistence) and “living labor” (working for artistic creation), Gulli convincingly argues for a definition of work that recognizes the importance of artistic and social creativity to our definition of labor and the self.

“[The] interpretive elements from the history of philosophy are among the nicest parts of Gulli’s book... [He] makes some excellent observations...”

The Holocaust and Memory in the Global Age

Daniel Levy and Natan Sznajder

Translated by Assenka Oksiloff

Originally published in Germany, The Holocaust and Memory in the Global Age examines the nature of collective memory in a globalized world, and how the memory of one particular event—the Holocaust—helped give rise to an emerging global consensus on human rights.

In the series Politics, History, and Social Change, edited by John C. Torpey

Dewey’s Dream

Universities and Democracies in an Age of Education Reform

Lee Benson, Ira Harkavy, and John Puckett

“A breath of fresh air! A manifesto that shows how to do as well as how to think by scholars not afraid to put their hearts and minds together to make things happen. The book makes Dewey’s dream of building democracy from the ground up a real project rather than a historically interesting idea.”— Gar Alperovitz
